JAMES BENNET
EDITOR
2009 Editor of the Year – ADVERTISING AGE

Before joining The Atlantic, Bennet was the Jerusalem bureau chief for The New York Times. During his three years in Israel, his coverage of the Middle East conflict was widely acclaimed for its balance and sensitivity. His much-lauded long-form writing for The New York Times Magazine caught the eye of David Bradley during his year-long search for a new editor. Bennet told a Times reporter that he saw the Atlantic job as “a chance to help, encourage, and preserve serious, long-form journalism.”

BOB COHN
EDITORIAL DIRECTOR, THEATLANTIC.COM

One of Washington, D.C.’s 50 Most Powerful People – GQ

Prior to joining TheAtlantic.com in January 2009, Cohn was for eight years the executive editor of Wired magazine and prior to that served as executive editor at The Industry Standard, a newsweekly covering the Internet economy. Cohn has won many national awards for his writing and editing. During his tenure at Wired, the magazine was nominated for 11 National Magazine Awards and won six, including three citations for General Excellence. At Newsweek, where he shared in more than a dozen awards, he was honored with the American Bar Association’s prestigious Silver Gavel Award for coverage of the Clarence Thomas Supreme Court confirmation process.

Buy based on quality, not price. Find brand name to be more important than price. Find it important that sales personnel be knowledgeable about the products they sell. Consider services of the store personnel to be important factor in making their shopping decisions. Favor environmentally safe products. Prefer products that offer the latest in technology. Always check ingredients and nutrition content on food products. Agree that their spouses have a significant impact on their purchasing decisions. Brand loyal, and willing to pay higher price for products made by a company they trust. Prefer to shop in stores that specialize in specific type of products.
The Atlantic engages an audience of more than 3 million of the nation’s most influential people in print, online, and live at a level unmatched by other media brands.
